Ginger Oil and Ginger Powder

- ○
○ A fragrant oil derived from ginger is called ginger oil, commonly referred to as ginger essence. It smells warm and spicy with hints of sweetness and citrus. This kind of oil has a long history of use, having been utilised for therapeutic purposes in ancient China and India. On the other hand, to make ginger powder, the dried root is finely ground. The distinctive feature of this product is that it may be added to herbal medicines or tea blends in addition to being used in cooking.

Indian Market Outlook

Since ancient times, ginger has been utilised both as a culinary element and as a medicine. The majority of it is grown in India, where it has been since the eighth century AD. Despite being available in grocery shops all over the world, India continues to be the main producer of ginger oil. The main cause of this is that unlike many other foods and spices, ginger oil cannot be mass-produced. Therefore, its demand is greater.
