An Introduction to Malic Acid Powder

Malic acid is an organic compound and a naturally occurring fruit acid. In biochemistry, it is one of the 10 essential metabolites. It plays an important role in two major metabolic pathways: glycolysis and gluconeogenesis. The salts and esters of malic acid are known as malates.

The name derives from Latin malum meaning apple, probably for its being found in apples and fermentation residues. Malic acid contributes to both tartness and flavor in fruits such as green apples, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, cranberries, grapes and passion fruit.

USES OF MALIC ACID POWDER:

Malic acid has a wide range of uses in food, medicine and manufacturing. Many companies use malic acid in their products as a preservative, and it is also used to produce soft drinks and wine.

Malic acid is found naturally in all living organisms, including plants, animals and humans. In medicine, it can be used to treat bladder infections caused by E. coli bacteria.

Most commonly, however, malic acid is added to apples to keep them crisp. It's also often used to help prevent foods from going bad and to inhibit mold growth. In manufacturing, malic acid is most commonly used in deodorants, perfumes and air fresheners. It's sometimes added to laundry detergents or fabric softeners for its anti-bacterial properties. It's also an ingredient in some cosmetics.

MANUFACTURING PROCESS

The malic acid manufacturing process begins with apples or other fruits, which are crushed and mixed with water. The fruit's sugar content is then converted into alcohol through fermentation. Next, bacteria are added to convert alcohol into acetic acid (also known as vinegar).

Finally, sodium bicarbonate (baking soda) is added to neutralize acetic acid, leaving only malic acid behind. This malic acid is then purified and dried to produce pure powder form. Malic acid powder production requires significant energy, but thanks to its many uses, it remains one of the most popular food additives on earth. It can also be used in a variety of cosmetic products, including toothpaste and moisturizers.

Why you should start Malic Acid Powder Production Business

The demand for malic acid is increasing as new uses for it are being discovered. As it becomes more widely used, more companies will need to create their own in-house supply, leading to an increase in demand.

- It's easy to produce: You don't need any special equipment or knowledge of chemistry to produce your own malic acid; you just have to follow a recipe!

➤ Read Similar Articles: Chemical Industry

- There's no substitute: There's no real substitute for malic acid, which makes it even more valuable to manufacturers.
- It's lucrative: With such high demand, you can make some serious money by getting into production yourself. This is especially true if you already run a business where you could use malic acid as an ingredient. If not, you might consider starting one!

- The price is going up: As demand grows and production levels are unable to keep up, naturally there will be less malic acid on the market; supply and demand means that when supply goes down, so does price – and only when prices go up do we see increased interest in producing more.

MARKET DEMAND:

As you know, malic acid powder is produced by decomposing fruit or plant waste in acidic medium at low temperature. The primary source of production is apple and pears, which are produced in large quantities every year. With an annual growth rate of 10%, it's estimated that worldwide production will reach 10 million tons by 2025.

There are plenty of room for expansion. In fact, there are only around 500 manufacturers globally producing more than 1 ton per year—and most of these companies have been established for more than 20 years. This means there's still plenty of room for new entrants into what could be a lucrative industry.

The malic acid is extensively used in various baking and confectionery items due to its antimicrobial properties and pH controlling abilities. It is also incorporated in various convenience and packaged food as a preservative to increase its shelf life and storage stability.

Along with this, the rise in working population has led to their increased reliability on convenience and ready-to-eat food products, which has contributed in fuelling its market growth. The rising consumers demand for natural food additives owing to their increasing awareness about the detrimental effects, such as skin allergies and asthma due to synthetic chemical additives, has driven the global malic acid market growth.

The increasing demand for functional beverages and nutritional bars, owing to the shifting preferences of consumers towards healthier food products has supported its market growth. Along with this, the booming food processing industry has also benefitted the malic acid market.
