Description:

Beekeeping is one of the oldest traditions in India for the collection of honey. Beekeeping is becoming popular due to its market demand in national and international markets as well. Not only do farmers make a sweet dividend but beekeeping also helps increase agriculture productivity through pollination. In order to maximize agricultural production, the honeybee can be used as an important input agent. About 80% of crop plants are cross-pollinated, as they need to receive pollen from other plants of the same species with the help of external agents.

Beekeeping has a rich and vibrant history, allowing it the potential to be used successfully as a development tool. Beekeeping culture varies widely across the world. In any given location, most beekeepers have proven the endeavor successful. Because success in beekeeping can be achieved through a variety of strategies, there is an excellent opportunity to utilize historical and cultural knowledge of beekeeping to expand and improve current industries. This, in turn, promises tremendous potential to improve livelihoods in developing countries.

Currently, the government is highly supporting self-contained watershed developing programs in which beekeeping is a part and parcel. Low-cost modern hives are being produced using locally available materials, and efforts are being made to organize farmers in groups and link them with local carpenters who produce modern beehives. There is an increasing demand for honey for domestic consumption and export by different customers and organizations. Though scarce in dry seasons, there are many bee forage species throughout the year in most parts of the study area. Availability of rich culture and tradition of beekeeping, suitable environment with different agro-ecology, availability of farmers having indigenous knowledge, skills, and keen interest to adopt improved technologies and to undertake beekeeping as a way of life are among the few to mention.
