PVC Insulated Winding Wires for Submersible Motors

Winding wires are insulated with a very superior grade of PVC compound to give it the necessary electrical strength and resistance to abrasion. The copper conductors of required purity and conductivity are drawn and annealed specification. The automatic on-line controls in our extrusion process consistently give high quality of Capital Cables winding wires.

The latest trend gaining momentum in the market is the rise in smart grid infrastructure. The economy, health and safety, and national security of any nation depend on the reliable delivery of electricity. The electricity grid is not just about power generation and transmission. It also includes an ecosystem of service providers, manufacturers, asset owners, and government officials at the local, state, and federal levels working together to run a reliable electrical grid. The development of smart grids across the globe is leading to the adoption of new metering technologies, better power protection measures, and use of efficient appliances.

The global winding wire market is growing at a steady rate. In 2016, the market experienced high demand from APAC, followed by EMEA. In recent times, the rise in urbanization along with an increase in industrialization in the developing nations is likely to fuel the demand for winding wires as these wires are used in a variety of industries.
