Coal is an extremely heterogeneous, complex material that is difficult to characterize. Coal is a rock formed by geological process and is composed of a number of distinct organic entities (macerals) and lesser amounts of inorganic substances (minerals). Each of the coal macerals and minerals has a unique set of physical and chemical properties, there in turn control the overall behavior of coal. Although much is known about the properties of minerals in coal, for example, the crystal chemistry, crystallography, and magnetic and electrical properties, surprisingly little is known about the properties of individual coal macerals. Even though coal is composed of macerals and minerals, it is not a uniform mixture of these substances. Users of coal - In the iron ore extraction plant, Domestic users as fuel sources, different industries using coal fired boiler. The demand of coal mining is increasing. So there exist a great scope for new entrepreneurs to enter in to this field.
