The production of poultry in the United States and generally throughout the world is carried out by a highly specialized, efficient poultry industry that has been a leader in trends of scale and industrialization that have taken place in American agriculture over the past half-century. A hatchery, breeder flocks, feed mill, processing plants and a number of contract growers served by technical service staff make up a typical integrated broiler company. More than 90 % of the commercial broilers are raised by growers under contract to a broiler farm. There is a surplus consumption of 2 crore eggs per day in AP, which is being exported to other states such as West Bengal, Uttar Pradesh, Maharashtra, Bihar etc, incurring transport charges of about 15-20 paise per egg. Poultry sector is one of the rare examples of socio-economic development, which attain its present status without much aid from government or investments from five years plans. There is a good scope for new entrants.
