Broadly speaking a fertilizer or manure, may be interpreted to mean anything that will increase the yield of a crop is added to the soil. Generally the fertilizers are divided into two main classes. First natural or organic manures and second artificial fertilizers. The Indian fertilizer industry is spread in all parts and corners of the country. Nitrogen phosphate acid potash mixtures are used on a variety of crops under a wide variety of soil and climate conditions. Single super phosphate is used mainly in agriculture as fertilizer. It is the water soluble fertilizer mostly required of used for adding to various soils as per requirements. Consumption of SSP is understood to be equal to its production that is around 3 million tonnes. As such India is lagging behind in consumption of all the chemical fertilizers, however, the consumption of phosphatic fertilizer is disproportionately very low. It is estimated that demand of SSP will increase at 15% per annum. There is a good scope for new investment.
