Activated alumina is one of the various grades O alumina used extensively as industrial adsorbent because of their properties of large surface area and very fine pores. These two properties play an important role in making a chemical suitable for solvent. It is extensively used as decolorizing, drying or degumming of petroleum fractions like solvents, fuels, lubricants, wastes etc. In India the activated alumina is being manufactured by the limited firms only whose production is quite insufficient to meet the growing demand. The consumption is increasing rapidly while the production is not sufficient. In order to fill up the gap between demand and supply, few more units for the manufacture of activated alumina are needed.
